McCALLUM, Alexander McK

(1872-1954)

Alexander McCallum was born on 3 September 1872, and his early life was spent in Scotland where he ~~had~~ entered the printing trade. He came to Falmouth in 1900 and joined Friends there, latter settling in Truro where he helped to re-open the Meeting.

He was Preparative Meeting clerk for 34 years, serving also as an elder, and undertaking valuable work in visitation over a long period. He had a joyous capacity for friendship and a sympathetic understanding and wisdom. His ministry dwelt much on the joy of service for the Kingdom.

He died on 22 December 1954.

Angus McCowen was born on November 6, 1908, and was educated at St. Peter's School, York. Later he took a degree in engineering at Cambridge. In York he had became interested in Friends and while at Cambridge he joined the Society.(1) and (2)

After his marriage he and his wife Gudrun became members of Wythenshawe(3) meeting, Manchester and there grew interested in the possibilities of wardenship. During the Spanish civil war he worked for Friends Relief Service from Barcelona aiding children and orphans. During the second world war Angus joined the Merchant Navy as an engineer and spent three years in convoy ships in the Atlantic. His wife and two small children remained in Manchester.

After the war he decided that teaching was his true vocation and after experience in several schools he moved his family to Reading (4) for twelve years while he taught at Leighton Park School and at the Oratory School. During this time and later he was a member of the Friend's Guild of Teachers, and was its treasurer for many years. He was a valued member of Reading meeting and also took part in the summer schools arranged for children of Friends and attenders.

In 1969 Angus and his wife were appointed first resident wardens of the meeting house at Welwyn Garden City (5) and the Testimony paints a glowing picture of the service which they rendered and the atmosphere which they created. At the beginning of 1976 he was taken ill with an incurable illness, but after a spell in hospital returned home and found that for a few months there was an apparent remission of his illness. He was able to complete some jobs in the meeting house and in the home they were preparing for their retirement and was also able to enjoy a holiday in the French Alps with his family from America.

He died on October 10, 1976, aged 65.

Janet McGrindell was born in about the year 1886 (1) in Birkenhead into a Presbyterian family. Her father was a shipbreaker and merchant and she was sent to Cheltenham Ladies College. As with many who came under the influence of that College she returned to Liverpool to become a pioneer in all kinds of movements for the removal of social injustice. She qualified in infant welfare work as a sanitary inspector - then the only training in social work open to women - and later became the first student to take the diploma of the pioneer School of Social Science at Liverpool University. From work in the Victoria Settlement and wardenship of the girls' club in the David Lewis Settlement she founded the Personal Service Society in the twenties and co-operated in the running of the Womens Citizens Association to help women to use the vote. From 1919 - 1933 she worked with Professor Carr-Saunders in the massive social survey of Merseyside by the Social Science Dept. of Liverpool University and was awarded an honorary M.A. degree by the University. At some time before this she had joined the Society of Friends.

She was a keen folk dancer and a great supporter of Cecil Sharp in founding the English Folk Dance & Song Society. During the thirties she brought together a small group of women who became the Federation of University Women and from 1933 for several years was advisory officer in the north of England for the National Council of Social Service.

In 1937-38 she began a series of travels visiting Friends in the United States, Canada, New Zealand, Australia and South Africa and on her retirement in 1946 she continued these visits. In 1952 she attended the Society of Friends International Conference of Social Work in Madras, travelling through India by rail, always second class, with her bedding roll. But before her retirement she worked at Bournville, Birmingham in womens work at the Beeches College and was appointed warden there caring for refugee Jewish children from eastern Europe. She was aware of the increasing need for homes for the elderly and became chairman of the advisory welfare committee of the Birmingham Council for Old People. She was actively engaged in the setting up of The Woodlands at Penn, Wolverhampton and of Bryony House at Selly Oak, Birmingham. In Birmingham she attended first Bournville Meeting and then after 1948 Selly Oak Meeting. She did not readily give in to old age and kept her mind clear and active with extensive reading, research and by attending concerts and extra mural lectures. She had many nephews of whom she was very proud and valued her family ties.

She died on January 3, 1983 at the age of 97.

He was brought to a knowledge of Jesus Christ in Carlisle in the year 1891, after being deeply convicted of sin, and two and a half years later moved to Sunderland to assist in the work carried on at the Pottery Buildings Mission.

'The great features of his life were intense thankfulness to God for having redeemed him, and joy in being permitted to tell others the good news of salvation, being always willing at a moment's notice to take up the burden of a soul in need, not being deterred by any outward hindrances. He had a remarkable influence over boys and young men, and was not satisfied with merely bringing them under the sound of the Gospel, but could not rest until he believed that they too had really become followers of the Lord Jesus Christ through faith in his blood'.

MACDONALD, Agnes (1882? - 1966)

Agnes Macdonald was born in about the year 1882,(1) of Scottish Presbyterian background, but after a period in the Unitarians was drawn to the Society of Friends, becoming acquainted with the small meeting in Edinburgh's West End initiated and fostered during the inter-war years by Ernest (1879-1958) and Olive Ludlam.(2)

She spent her life in social service, she was involved with the starting and carrying on of the Barns School for 'difficult' evacuee boys during the second world war. She had earlier been an ardent suffragette, suffering imprisonment for her views and when the vote was gained she devoted herself to furthering the social responsibilities of women, for many years she was secretary of the Edinburgh Womens Citizens Association. She was active in the Fabian Society for some time and latterly in the Old People's Welfare Council.

She was a greatly valued member in Edinburgh and in Scotland generally and took a great share in the organisation of the 1948 Yearly Meeting in Edinburgh. She also served on a number of Friends' central committees.

In later years increasing infirmity compelled her to enter a hospital and she died on October 21, 1966, aged 84.

MacINTYRE, Joseph (c1806-1873)

Joseph MacIntyre was born about 1806 (1). He was convinced in early life of the scriptural truth of Friends' principles, through the reading of Barclay's Apology. He professed with Friends for a long period, although it is not clear whether he ever became a member of the Society (2). Mary Jane Doncaster (1845- , born Miller) described him in 1874 as having been about twenty years previously

'... an old man in a snuff-brown orthodox suit, and a round ruddy face, with eager, restless grey eyes. He has been listening attentively to Lydia Barclay, and has understood her if I have not, if we may judge from the emphatic nods with which every sentence has been received; it is Joseph MacIntyre, the worthy watchmaker of Crieff, who has for once put off his well-worn and patched garments for the aforesaid snuff-brown, and left his Highland home to take part in the assembly of the church. A curious mixture is he, uniting to the most passionate love of his own Gaelic nation, a deep reverence for Barclay's Apology and all other exponents of orthodox Quakerism. Ever since the death of his mother, whom he cherished with the utmost devotion, he has lived alone ... with no kindred...' (3)

He died on 11 January 1873, at Comrie Street, Crieff, Perthshire, Scotland, aged about 67, and was buried at Inverar, in Glen Lyon. He left 'a small property to Edinburgh Two Months Meeting, under the care of trustees ... to apply the yearly proceeds to the purchase and gratuitous distribution of his favourite work, Barclay's Apology (Irwin's edition), considering it the best elucidation of the Christian faith of the Society of Friends.' (4)

'He leaves all his books on Horology to the Horological Society of London, and those on Celtic Lore, to the Celtic Society of Glasgow.' It is clear from Mary Jane Doncaster's recollection above, which continued with her hopes 'of getting him to repeat in Gaelic some of those grand strains of Ossian, whose whole book he has at his tongue's end', that he was a Gaelic speaker. No record of Joseph MacIntyre's death has been traced in Digest of Deaths or in the Annual monitor.

MACKELLOW, Jane (1764-1841) born Chandler

Jane Chandler, the daughter of Joseph and Ann Chandler of Guildford in Surrey, was born there on 11 July 1764(1). She was married in 1807 to John Mackellow (1772?-1862 qv) and there was one child(2).

She was firmly attached by education and conviction to the principles of the Society, but was of a diffident and retiring disposition and shrank from expressing her feelings on religious subjects. She was consistent and exemplary in her conduct and her Christian sympathy extended beyond the bounds of the Society to all whom she encountered.

See SMITH, Jane (1808-1886) born Mackellow)

MACKELLOW, John (1772?-1862)

John Mackellow, the son of William and Jane Mackellow, was born about the year 1772(1). His parents, who were not members of the Society of Friends, were in very poor circumstances and John had no advantages of education or training. As a young man he joined the army and for a time was noted among his comrades as one of the most hardened and depraved. But he suffered a sudden and complete change of heart, which caused him to view his former conduct in a totally different light; this change does not appear to have been the result of any outward influence or teaching, but was entirely due to the working of the Holy Spirit in his heart.

For some time he had to endure much ridicule and persecution, but his perseverance in his new way of life at length won him the respect and affection of his officers and associates. He was not at that time aware of the existence of the Society, but after he left the army he attended a Friends' meeting and shortly afterwards joined the Society. On leaving the army he became a watchmaker(2). He was married in 1807 to Jane Chandler (1764-1841 qv), the daughter of Joseph and Ann Chandler of Guildford in Surrey(3) and there was one child(4).

He sincerely believed that all war was incompatible with the precepts of the Gospel and was also a total abstainer, giving much of his time to the work of temperance societies. He was indeed interested in any project which tended to benefit his fellows and through a long and useful life was an example of practical Christianity.

He died after a brief illness, at Maidstone in Kent on 27 November 1862, at the age of ninety(5).

He had a retiring, unobtrusive disposition, but was greatly beloved, especially in his family circle; nothing could provoke his extreme forbearance. MACKIE, Rachel Ann (1826-1906) born May Rachel Ann May, one of the eleven children of Joseph May, was born at Hertford on 9 November 1826. She attended Ackworth School for almost two years, accompanying her parents to South Australia in 1839, where they were prominent in founding the Friends Meeting.

In 1856 she married Frederick Mackie (1812-1893, qv) and accompanied him to Hobart, where they kept a small school for Friends' children till their return to South Australia in 1861. In 1881 her husband, who had travelled as a ministering Friend throughout Australia and New Zealand, felt called to minister similarly to small and isolated meetings in Great Britain and Ireland. For the next four years they lived at Hertford, in the intervals of this service, returning to South Australia in 1885. After her husband's death in 1893, she was undecided where to live but finally settled in Hobart in 1900.

Here Rachel Ann Mackie again became an active leader in the Women's Christian Temperance Union. She was for many years an Elder and a Minister. Her frequent vocal ministry was heard acceptably in Meeting for Worship.

On 17 January 1906 she died, having proved herself 'a valued friend, a motherly counsellor'.

MACKINNON, John (1802?-1868)

John Mackinnon, details of whose birth and parentage are not at present (1977) traced, was born about the year 1802(1). He was a native of Calton near Glasgow and was brought up among a body of Seceders called the Relief Synod, who had left the Church of Scotland as a protest against the system of patronage; they ultimately, with other Scottish dissenters, formed the United Presbyterian Church.

But their method of worship did not entirely satisfy John Mackinnon and he was led fairly late in life to join the Society of Friends, as being more in accord with the teachings of the New Testament. He carried his religious convictions into his daily life and won the affection and regard of all who knew him. He had a very humble view of himself and whilst he would adhere firmly to what he knew to be right, modesty and diffidence were conspicuous features of his character. He was apparently married to Mary and they had a son Peter, who was married in 1862 to Agnes Murdoch(2).

He died at Carnbroe, near Coatbridge in Lanarkshire, on 14 July 1868, at the age of sixty six(3).

see also W.B.E.

Priscilla Bright, daughter of Jacob and Martha Bright, was born at Greenbank, Rochdale, on 8 September 1815, the fifth of eleven children. One of her earliest memories was of her father's goods being sold for church rates. Another was of his insistence on exact speech. Their mother encouraged them in writing articles for a fortnightly home magazine. With her sisters, Priscilla ran a school to teach reading, writing and sewing to her father's factory girls. They both supported their brother John's Anti-Corn Law work.

On her marriage to Duncan McLaren of Edinburgh, Priscilla was disowned by the Society, but fifty years later she was restored to membership.

In Edinburgh she shared in the organisation of a Peace Conference held while her husband was Lord Provost. She was personally thanked by women in the poorer districts of the city when her husband's influence led to the Sunday closing of public houses.

Priscilla supported the cause of women in their struggle for admission to the school of medicine at Edinburgh University, and in the campaign for votes for women, and of course was concerned for the rightful position of women Friends.

She died on 5 November 1906, and memorial services were held in St. Margaret's, Westminster, and St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh. She was 92.

MACMASTER, Margarethe Marga (1878 ? - 1967) born

Margarethe MacMaster was born in about the year 1878 (1) We have no knowledge of her unmarried name nor of her early life, but she seems to have lived in Hamburg.

She married Gilbert MacMaster (1869 - 1967 qv.) an American Friend, who as a worker in Europe for the AFSC and after a life of service, in which, no doubt, she joined him, they retired to Basle. There, although age prevented them from taking part in the meeting, they maintained their contacts with AFSC and with Friends throughout the world.

She died on November 7, 1967 (about 6 days after her husband's death) aged 89.

MACMURRAY, John

(1891 - 1976)

John Macmurray was born on February 16, 1891, at Maxwellton, Kircudbrightshire, the son of James Macmurray, civil servant.

He was educated at Grammar School and at Robert Gordon's College, Aberdeen. He graduated from Glasgow University and went on to Balliol College, Oxford. His period at Oxford was interrupted by his war service which he entered as a private in the R.A.M.C., but became a lieutenant in the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, being awarded the M.C.

He became

In 1919 he was appointed Lecturer in Philosophy, University of Manchester, Professor of Philosophy in the University of the Witwatersrand, in S. Africa, in 1921; Fellow and Classical Tutor and Jowett Lecturer in Philosophy, Balliol College, Oxford 1922 - 1928 and Grote Professor of the Philosophy of Mind and Logic, University of London 1928 - 1944.

In 1916 he married Elizabeth Hyde Campbell, daughter of Geo. Campbell of Umsinga, Natal, and of Banchory, Kincardineshire. There were no children.

In 1932, while at the University of London he published, under the title "Freedom in the Modern World" the text of broadcast talks given over the B.B.C. in the summer of 1930 and in January 1932. Many other publications followed.(1) From this time onward he is likely to have made contact with Quakerism but it was not until the war, that he and his wife (Betty), a painter herself, went to live in Jordans village. By that time he was giving some lectures under Quaker auspices, and was increasingly in touch with Friends but being unready to commit himself to membership of any religious body it was with the villagers of Jordans, rather than with the Quakers, that he and his wife became integrated. John Macmurray involved himself deeply in village concerns, being largely instrumental in the opening of the first Jordans primary school, and helping to organise the reception of evacuees from London. He enjoyed contacts with young people, and also became a proficient and enthusiastic recorder player. In 1944 he was appointed to the Chair of Moral Philosophy at the University of Edinburgh and he remained there until his retirement in 1958 when he and his wife returned to a bungalow built for them in Jordans, to spend their time in creating their garden and in writing and in painting. John Macmurray was also a member of the Inter-University Council for Higher Education Overseas from its foundation until 1957. He had also visited Jamaica, Ghana, Nigeria and had travelled extensively in the U.S.A.(2).

21

In about 1959 he and his wife made application to join the Society of Friends and were accepted.(3) He was a great asset to the meeting at Jordans, with deep humility, he spoke sparingly and sensitively in meeting, became an elder and represented Bedfordshire QM on Meeting for Sufferings from 1964 - 1966.(4) In 1965 he delivered the Swarthmore Lecture at London Yearly Meeting on the subject " Search for Reality in Religion ".

In 1966 John and Betty Macmurray celebrated their golden wedding at Jordans, but shortly afterwards they returned to Edinburgh (5) where he died on June 21, 1976 aged 85.

XXXXXXXXXX, Alfred (1827?-1847)

Alfred Macquillan, the son of Joseph and Hannah Macquillan, was born about the year 1827(1). His mother died while he was young and he lived for two years with a relative at Ferns. When he was old enough he was sent to school at Mountmellick and after spending about two years there he went on to Hindfield Agricultural School, where he remained for some time. At about the age of fifteen he was apprenticed to a friend in Carlow; he was a seriously minded boy and his steadiness of conduct and attention to business gained him the good opinion of his employer. In the last year of his life his seriousness increased and he was diligent in reading the Bible and other sacred books.

He died at Carlow on 5 September 1847 at the age of twenty.

MADDOCKS, Thomas Albert (- 1966)

Thomas Maddocks was born in North London and educated at the Stationers' School. As a young man he took an interest in the work of the Ferme Park Baptist School and married Brenda Smith, a fellow worker there. He trained as a surveyor but gave up his work during the second world war to take up land work as a conscientious objector. As a result of this he came into contact with members of the Society of Friends and he and his wife became members in the early years of the war, joining the meeting at New Barnet in about 1940/41.(1) They lived at Potters Bar and were instrumental in developing a meeting there, he was serving as its correspondent at the time of his death.(2)

After the war he returned to his profession as a surveyor, qualifying as a Fellow of the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors, and also of the Chartered Auctioneers and Estate Agents' Institute. He became a partner in his firm and his integrity, sincerity and wisdom were highly valued by his colleagues.

From 1953 he represented Devonshire House & Tottenham MM on Six Weeks Meeting, being appointed as assistant clerk of that meeting in 1963 and clerk in 1966. His professional knowledge was of great value to the Meeting. He represented Friends on the local Council of Churches (at one time being its chairman) and on the Free Church Council, of which he was treasurer. He also worked for the local Old People's Welfare Committee and for the United Nations Association. In 1963 he became interested in a small school at Ottapidaram in Southern India, for children of all faiths and by his efforts raised a considerable sum to help with building the school and with feeding pupils who were orphans.

He died in hospital on August 25, 1966. No age is given.

James Magill was an investment banker, a partner of Eastman, Dillon and Co. in Philadelphia. He was overseer and treasurer of William Penn Charter School from 1929 to 1959; on the Board of Managers of Haverford College from 1959 to 1968 and vice-chairman from 1968-69; on the Board of Directors of the University of Pennsylvania Museum, Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, Food Fair Stores and Commonwealth Telephone Co. He was appointed to the Philadelphia Art Commission, a position he held from 1957-64.

A tireless supporter of Haverford College, James Magill led the campaign to raise funds for its new library which was then named for him. James Magill established a scholarship program in honor of Jonathan Rhoads in 1973, was instrumental in establishing Haverford's chamber music program and gave money for a new locker facility. His gifts to Haverford over the years amounted to over 4 million dollars.

A life-long Friend, James Magill was a member of Germantown Monthly Meeting.

MAJOLIER, Christine (1805-1879) aftw. Alsop

[Christine Majolier was married in 1846 to

MAJOLIER, Louis Antoine (1764-1842) 3

Louis Majolier was born at Calvisson, Gard in April 1764. His parents belonged to a sect which later professed principles similar to those of the Society of Friends, before they knew such a Society existed. This sect had sprung from another, known as "the prophets" which met in silence to worship God and waited for the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. They felt the gift of the ministry, freely received, should be freely exercised.

His parents, neither rich nor educated, procured an education for their son and placed him with a notary at Ambraix. Soon after he read of the Society of Friends in England, felt called on to spread their principles and thought the law would make too many demands on his time and compromise his principles. He therefore became a stocking weaver. He married Mary Brun of Fontanes; a member of his own Society.

Soon after his marriage he was visited by Friends from England and America - George and Sarah Dilwyn, Mary Dudley, Robert and Sarah Grubb, Adey Bellamy and John Eliot.

He then felt himself called to the ministry and opened a school at Congenies. During the revolution the school was suspended and they were no longer permitted to meet for worship. He was frequently in want and once almost arrested for writing in his friends' favour. Some of his friends drew back.

In 1791 he visited Friends in England but war soon cut off communications. After the revolution he was engaged in the sale of nobles' lands, but would buy nothing for himself. He restarted the school and acted as surveyor for Napoleon's new system of taxation, and later as an arbitrator. He had eight children and found it hard to provide for them. He went twice to St. Etienne to visit a similar community there and translated the works of Friends, particularly Richard Claridge. On March 6 1842 he died, aged 78, having been a minister for about 54 years.

Louis Majolier was born at Calvisson in the district of the Gard, in the south of France. He married Marie Brun, of Fontaines and they resided at Congenies. It was soon after the marriage that the district was visited by a little band of Friends from Great Britain to which he soon became united, and in 1791 he visited England and joined the Society. His daughter Christine (d. 1879) became the well-known wife of Robert Alsop,

MAJOLIER, Lydie (1808-1889)

Lydie Majolier was born at Congenies, France, in 1808, the daughter of Louis Majolier and Marie (Brun). From early childhood she was deeply attached to the principles of the Society, - an attachment strengthened by the frequent visits of English and American Friends to her home.

Having much time at her own disposal she consecrated her gifts of health and activity to the good of others. She visited her sister Christine Alsop in England from time to time, and Friends who had the privilege of knowing her retained a valuable recollection of their intercourse with her, both socially and religiously. For many years Lydia Majolier was a recorded minister.

'Our dear friend exercised an unwearied hospitality towards her friends, and she cherished a warm sympathy with those who laboured for the advancement of the kingdom of God. But her charity extended beyond the boundary of our Society, and we believe that she sought, above all else, to know and to do the "Good and acceptable and perfect will of God."'

Lydie Majolier died 28 February 1889.

John Major was born in about the year 1896.(1) He gained an Hons, degree in mathematics at Emanuel College, Cambridge and decided on teaching as a career. From 1916 - 1919 he served with the Friends Ambulance Unit on Ambulance Train No. 16 and then taught first at Stockton Boys Secondary School and then at ~~Ackworth~~ Ayton Friends School.(2) It was during the time that he was at Stockton that he became a member of the Society of Friends.(3) At Ayton he met Kathleen Ridges, also teaching there and they were married in 1924.(4) In about 1932 he was appointed headmaster of Leigh Grammar School where he remained until his retirement in about 1955. At Leigh during his headship the level of scholarship was significantly raised.

He involved himself in all sorts of public service, while in Stockton he founded and became chairman of the Wear, Tees & Eskdale group of the Youth Hostels Association, and also Chairman for two years of the Council of the Y.H.A. At Leigh, he became chairman of the Lancashire & Cheshire Headmasters' Association and a committee member of the National association. He was also, for fifteen years (1938 - 1953) chairman of the Manchester Friends Refugee Committee.

In about 1955 he retired to the Lake District, to Colthouse Meeting which he served as clerk. While there he also became active in the preservation of the National Parks and was chairman for some years of the National Parks Standing Committee in London. This in spite of increasing heart trouble. Later he moved to Reading where his last years were spent in taking part in the activities of Reading Preparative and Monthly meetings which greatly valued his services.

He died at his home in Reading on February 25, 1966, aged 70.

REFERENCES & NOTES

1. We have no date of birth, he was aged 70 at death.
2. The Obituary cited above makes no mention of his service at Ayton School. It states that he met Kathleen Ridges while they were both at Ackworth in the early twenties. The Durham QM printed lists of members records them both at Ayton School in 1926. Their last appearance is in the lists for 1932 still at Ayton.
3. The same lists for 1922 record him as a member at South Shields.
4. Marriage Digest. The marriage took place on July 25, 1924. I am not sure if the obituary statement that they met while they were both teachers is correct, because he is described as schoolteacher of Glossop, while she is described as Kathleen May Ridges, of Buckland Monachorum in West Devon MM. If both were teaching at Ayton at this time, surely they would not be so described? (SGJ)

HALCOMSON, David (1811?-1840)

His father was a miller at Clonmel and was also concerned in several other business undertakings, in which he was assisted by his sons. Malcomson Brothers with Anthony G. Robinson owned the St Petersburgh Steamship Company, London and Petrograd, and it is likely that David Malcomson was originally a partner in this venture, although he gave up the prospect of worldly success in order to devote himself to religion(3).

MALCOMSON, Frances Jane (1862-1922) born White

Frances J. White, the daughter of Henry White of Waterford and his wife Elizabeth, born May of Reigate in Surrey, was born at Reigate on 2 October 1862. She was educated at home, with a year at Bedford College in London and on 23 July 1888 she became the second wife of Joseph Malcomson (1857-1937 qv), who had previously been married to her sister Henrietta; the marriage was at Christiana in Norway and there were three children.

In 1896 she and her husband were called to missionary work in Ceylon, where they gave many years of loving service. Her judgment was calm and clear and was invaluable in her share of the work. She entertained both European and native workers at the frequent gatherings for conference and business and only those who experienced her loving care and her skill in organising could appreciate to the full how deeply she cared for the spiritual as well as the material needs of those with whom she worked.

She was handicapped by delicate health and absolute deafness, but in spite of these limitations she never lost her faith and happy hopefulness in her work. The last few years brought her fresh interest in medical work for the Tamil coolies on the Clodagh estate; in connection with this a hospital for women and children and two or three creches were opened and with some help she managed to superintend these herself, bringing to all she did the warmth and love of her personality.

Part of the extensive work she and her husband did was finally handed over to the Friends Foreign Mission Association, but they continued to give it their warm hearted support. Frances J. Malcomson was made a consultative member of the Board of the F.F.M.A. in 1913 and continued this work until her death.

She died at Matale in Ceylon on 30 January 1922.

MALCOLMSON, Margaret Winifred (1917-1976) born Garnett

Margaret Winifred Garnett, the daughter of John Benbow Garnett (1877-1973 qv) and his wife Winifred Agnes (born Thorley, 1883?-1970 qv) of Manchester, was born there on 24 March 1917(1). She was educated at Ackworth School from 1931 to 1934.

MALCOLMSON, Joseph (1857-1937)

Joseph Malcomson, the son of William Malcomson of Milfort, Portlaw near Waterford in Ireland and his wife Elizabeth, born Robinson of Moate, was born at Portlaw on 26 April 1857. He was educated at Newtown School, Waterford and at Grove House School, Tottenham. He was married at Tramore on 5 June 1884 to Henrietta White, the daughter of Henry White of Waterford, and on her death he was married at Christiana in Norway on 23 July 1888 to her sister Frances Jane White (1862-1922 qv); there were three children(1).

He was a merchant and manufacturer, but in September 1895 he and his wife offered themselves for service in Ceylon under the Friends Foreign Mission Association; there had not hitherto been any Friends' mission work in Ceylon. They were accepted in 1896. Joseph Malcomson's call to service came to him while at a conference in Keswick and was felt at the same time by his wife Frances in her beautiful home in Portlaw.

Their first few years were spent near Matale, where Joseph Malcomson united in his work with other missionaries. He offered his house at Portlaw as a Missionaries' Children's Home in 1895 and a few years later bought a large estate about seven miles from Matale, which he called Clodagh. As soon as he had built a bungalow there in 1900 he also opened schools and a hospital on the estate and conducted an English service in the hospital each Sunday afternoon. A second estate was bought later and as the work began to take up more and more time, Joseph Malcomson offered all he had organised outside his own property to the Friends Foreign Mission Association. His health had also caused trouble and owing to family commitments he was only able after 1908 to pay intermittent visits to Ceylon. Several missionaries carried on the work for some years and in 1913 Joseph Malcomson was released from his position as a missionary and appointed a consultative member of the Board.

But money and workers were becoming scarce and in 1922 Friends in England decided to relinquish their responsibilities and hand over the work to others. Joseph Malcomson, however, continued to work on his own estate and for a time a girls' boarding school was maintained at Clodagh, later being moved to Kandy. Joseph died at Clodagh on 24 February 1937, at the age of seventy nine.

MALCOMSON, Sarah (David) (1812-1864) born Richardson

Sarah Richardson, the daughter of James Nicholson Richardson (1782-1847) and his wife Anna, born Grubb, of Lisburn, was born in the year 1812. She was second in age among a large family of ten brothers and sisters and early felt responsible for the effect her example might have on those younger than herself. Her health was not robust and she was inclined to find occupation in reading and reflection, rather than in the more active amusements of her brothers and sisters. Early in life she became sensible of the love of God and sought to devote her life to his service.

She was married in 1838 to David Malcomson (1811?-1840 qv), who was well equipped by his own religious experience to give her the support and sympathy she needed. He had already given up the opportunity of worldly success in order to devote his time to the things of the spirit. But little more than two years after the marriage David died, leaving his widow with an only child.

After her husband's death Sarah returned to Lisburn to look after her widowed father until his death in 1847. She built a large house called Lishagarvy, which became a gathering place for her younger brothers and sisters and she was regarded as a second mother by her brothers. She also had a very kindly way with her young nieces and nephews and temporarily adopted a young nephew after the death of his mother. She had a way of presenting religion to a child in a manner which inculcated a liking and respect for spiritual matters, although she gave no definite teaching. She never ordered children to do or not to do anything, but seemed to have an instinctive knowledge of what a child's mind could understand and appealed to its small reason and affection most effectively.

She died at Lishagarvy following an attack of Bronchitis, on 18 May 1864, at the age of fifty two.

MALCOMSON, William (1813-1892)

William Malcomson, the son of David Malcomson (1764?-1844 qv) and his wife Mary, born Fennell, of Clonmel in county Tipperary, was born in the year 1813. His father was a miller in Clonmel, but he was also concerned with his sons in many other business undertakings and the Malcomson Brothers of Neptune Iron Works, Waterford, were extensive ship builders and steamship owners. They launched many ships and the S.S. Avoca, built at the Neptune Works, was the first steamship to attempt in 1862 to force the ice at Odessa and open the port. William Malcomson was chairman of Lever's Line, Galway to the U.S.A.

He was a large, fair, handsome man, with whom children and young people instinctively felt at home. Even in the middle of his extensive business cares he could always throw himself, when at home, into the small cares and concerns of his six children(1); probably no man was ever more beloved by his family or deserved it more. He was also extremely observant of the small courtesies of life; guests were always met at the station, either by himself or a member of his family, and he was a good and polite listener. He was very hospitable and at one time entertained on a large scale.

One of the most enearing traits of his character was his extreme slowness to take offence and the frank manner in which he forgave it. In later life, when he expected to take things more easily, he had more than his fair share of misfortune; his second wife became an invalid and needed a great deal of care and attention, but the care she could not give to him was lovingly given by his daughters. His inherent nobleness of disposition seemed to shine in misfortune; in prosperity and adversity there was something great about William Malcomson, far beyond the ordinary run of men, and in both conditions he was always a sincere and humble Christian.

He died in 1892.

MANLEY, Priscilla (1773-1850) born James

Priscilla Manley was the daughter of William and Priscilla James of Redruth, where she was born on 3 February 1773. About the year 1803 she came to live in London and in the following year was acknowledged as a minister by Devonshire House M.M. "Her offerings in the ministry were neither long nor frequent, but were accompanied with an evidence of life, proving the source from whence they proceeded" (*) She undertook religious visits to Friend families in Kingston and Ratcliff M.M.s and to Meetings in East Anglia.

In 1811 she was married to William Manley. During many years of the latter part of her life she was confined by an affecting illness, but she loved the company of her Friends. A few months before she died she was wheeled in her chair to Leighton Buzzard Meeting House and attended two evening meetings, in the latter of which she spoke a few words. She died on 14 October 1850 aged about 78 $\frac{1}{2}$. Her body was interred in Friends burial ground, Leighton Buzzard.

HANLEY, William (1771-1851)

William Manley was born on 6 December 1771, the youngest son of James Manley and his wife Elizabeth (born Lockwood), who were married in St George's Church, Bloomsbury, on 18 February 1762. He was not by birth a member of the Society and first came into contact with Friends when, with John Grey (1775-1838 qv) who became his lifelong friend, he was apprenticed to the pewterer Thomas Compton (1749-1817 qv) of Booth Street in Spitalfields, a prominent London Quaker who had jeopardised his position in the Society by befriending Hannah Barnard (1754²-1829? qv) during her conflict with London Friends in 1810 and 1811. In Thomas Compton's house, according to the account given by his granddaughter Lydia Manley, he waited at table as was the custom for apprentices and had an opportunity to listen to Friends visiting his master; "they used sometimes to speak before (or after) meals in the sitting-still time. In this way my grandfather was convinced of Friends' Principles, to the dismay of his relatives who were alienated from him for some time, but later were reconciled." William Manley also read widely among books about the Society and was deeply influenced by William Penn's "No Cross, No Crown" and by Sewell's "History of Friends," which he got up at four in the morning to read. After having attended Friends' meetings for a number of years he was received into the Society in 1794.

His manner was gentle and his conduct such as to recommend him to Friends; in due course he was appointed an overseer and later became an elder of his meeting. It was his practice to give up one evening every week to visit with a friend all those who were in any way in need of help or comfort, as well as to deal with those whose conduct deserved his censure. For more than thirty years, from 1811 to 1844, he served as Recording Clerk to the Society, the eleventh to hold the appointment, although the office was not known by that name until 1836 and when he was appointed it was as "Office Clerk;" he was remembered by Friends throughout the country for his unobtrusive kindness and courtesy. His period of office took him through the stormy period following the publication of the "Beacon" in 1834 and he took a typically middle way, remaining in sympathy with the main body of Friends who leaned neither to an extreme Evangelical nor an extreme Quietist view. He was also a freeman of the City of London and a member of the Pewterer's Company.

In 1812 he married Priscilla James (1775-1850 qv) of Redruth in Cornwall(1), who appeared in the ministry in 1804. They had an only son William(2) who married Lydia Tuke, the daughter of Robert Tuke, at Ackworth in 1843, and settled at Leighton Buzzard.

He died at Leighton Buzzard, where he had retired to live near his son, on 21 January 1851(3), aged seventy nine.

MANNICHE

Peter

(1890 ? - 1981) nm

Peter Manniche was born in about the year 1890.(1) In 1912, in the town of Odense, he met a group of English Friends under the leadership of Tom Bryan () head of Fircroft College, who were in Denmark to study the Danish Folk High Schools. They found an immense spiritual fellowship and Tom Bryan invited him to visit Fircroft. During the first world war while serving as a soldier, an experience which turned him into a pacifist, he felt a great urge to go to England and meet the Quakers again. After great difficulties he accomplished this in 1916 and as Fircroft was in use as a hospital he went to Woodbrooke instead and there found help and support in all kinds of ways for his idea of founding an international Folk High School in Denmark. H.G.Wood () and his tutor Barratt Brown () put him in touch with various Friends including Arnold Rowntree () who promised to give bursaries for three years, when the school was started, for workers from Cadbury Bros. and others. After hard work he opened the International Peoples High School at Elsinore in a small way at the beginning but it grew to have real significance with students from all over the world. Peter Manniche stayed as principal until 1954 and there was hardly any summer term without a teacher from the Society of Friends, among them being William Marwick () of Edinburgh and Douglas Steer () from Pennsylvania.

Peter Manniche did not join the Society of Friends but he valued very highly his contacts with it, his one wish was that the school could have had a Friend as its head. He travelled widely in furtherance to improve communications between peoples and to improve the conditions of the Third World. When he died the Danish Government newspaper had the headline "Manniche is dead" testifying to the extent to which he name and his personality were known in the country. It also spoke of how much the Society of Friends and the things which Quakers stood for in life had meant to him.

A few months before his death he and his wife had moved into an old peoples home in Elsinore and he died there on February 15, 1981, aged 91 years.

MANNING, Douglas J (1896 ? - 1980)

Douglas Manning was born in about the year 1896.(1) His father was John Manning a farmer and after ordinary schooling he joined the Civil Service as a boy clerk in 1911 and was posted to the Board of Trade where he stayed for the rest of his working life. As a C.O. he suffered in the first world war and was held back from promotion on that account but eventually became librarian in the Board of Trade and received the O.B.E. for his services in 1956. He served on the Civil Service Clerical Officers' Association and was chairman of the staff side of his Dept's Whitley Council. In 1924 he had married Edith Porteous, not at that time in membership of the Society.

He was shy and retiring by nature but he had immense capacity which he exercised both in his day to day career and in his service for the Society. In 1922 he was clerk of Sydenham meeting and a year later became clerk of Kingston MM (3) In later years he was a member of Sutton meeting. He served on Meeting for Sufferings and on the old War and Social Order Committee, becoming chairman of its successor the Industrial & Social Order Council.(4)

He died on February 28, 1980, aged 84.

MANNING, John (c.1668-1729)

John Manning was born at Yarmouth of parents who were not members of the Society of Friends and was educated by them in the beliefs and principles of the Church of England. When he arrived at manhood he joined the General Baptists and continued in profession with them for some years, believing that he had found the way of Truth. However, through the testimony of Thomas Wilson and James Dickinson he became convinced of "the Nature of an Inward & Spiritual Worship . . . and giving up to the Convictions he then received, readily made Profession with us as a People and continued therein to his death. He was a man who Feared God & Eschewed Evil. He was temperate in his Apparel, Diet, and Desires . . . He was Beneficent to the Poor . . . grave in his outward Deportment amongst men, and Devout in all his Religious Performances." In 1694 he married Susanna Hunt(1) and there were two children of the marriage.(2)

He died in the sixty second year of his age on 21.x. (December) 1729(3) and was buried in the Friends' burial ground in Norwich.

MANSER, Emily (1827-1862)

Emily Manser, the daughter of William and Priscilla Manser of Hertford, was born there on 19 February 1827(1). She was from childhood very delicate and was forced to live a very quiet and withdrawn life, but she was extremely gifted and used her time to cultivate her mind. Her favourite study was theology and she learnt Greek in order to study the New Testament in the original language. She was well read in the works of early Friends, for which she had a great regard.

She rarely spoke about her learning, unless her opinion was sought, when it was freely given. She regarded her life as wasted in relation to what she could do for others, but considering her feeble health she took a large share in philanthropic work in the town in which she lived.

She died at Hitchin after a painful illness, on 9 August 1862, at the age of thirty five(2).
